happens to fathers", which was read by Mrs. John Swisher, was intensely human and dealt with the whereabouts of fathers paraphernalia and his son.

Summarizing Mr. Adam's address would say he is no advocate of the "iron rod", but on the contrary of children's individualism and companionship of parents and their offspring.

It has been customary in the past to have the mother's present at our regular meetings vote for our banner by arising when the room in which they have a child or children is called. The vote for the banner was taken this month including the father and Mrs. L. Robinson Buy's room won same, having 17 votes to Miss Morningstar's 15; Mrs. Sandidge 13; Miss Stoll 12 and Miss Nelson's 12.

We were very happy to have our P. T. A. neighbors from Oak Forest, Mokena, Orland Park and Midlothian in our midst.

We received applications from quite a few new members, and as we have a very progressive leader there is no reason for the Tinley Park Parent-Teachers Association not flourishing.

LEST WE FORGET

Although a thousand weary miles of ocean lie between us and the graves of those who gave their lives in 1917 and 1918... and although the years be long since their sacrifice was new... we have not forgotten the sacrifice made by those who were spared us and who live today.

ARMISTICE DAY is their day... and we join the world in paying homage to our heroes.

LIGHTFOOT TELLS HOW HIS HORNS GREW

IT IS hard to believe what seems impossible. And yet what seems impossible to you may be a very commonplace matter to some one else. So it does not do to say that a thing cannot be just because you cannot understand how it can be. Peter Rabbit wanted to believe what Lightfoot the Deer had just told him, but somehow he couldn't believe it. You see Lightfoot had just told Peter that the splendid great horns which crowned Lightfoot's head were new and had grown that summer. Do you wonder that Peter found this hard to believe? If he had seen them growing it would have been another matter. But he hadn't seen Lightfoot since the very last of the winter and then Lightfoot had had just such handsome horns as he now wore, so he really couldn't be blamed for not being able to believe that those had been lost and in their place new ones had grown in just the few months of spring and summer.

So when Peter had asked him about the rags hanging to his horns, Lightfoot had told Peter that he didn't like to tell things to people who wouldn't believe them. And Peter didn't blame Lightfoot in the least. "I'm trying to believe it," he said humbly.

"It's all true," broke in another voice. Peter turned to find his cousin, Jumper the Hare, sitting near. Unseen and unheard he had stolen up and had overheard what Peter and Lightfoot had said.

"How do you know it is true?" snapped Peter, a little crossly, for Jumper had startled him.

"Because I saw Lightfoot's old horns after they had fallen off, and I often saw Lightfoot while his new horns were growing," retorted Jumper.

"All right! I'll believe anything that Lightfoot tells me if you say it is true," declared Peter, who greatly admired his cousin Jumper. "Now tell me about those rags clinging to your horns, Lightfoot. Please do."

Lightfoot couldn't resist that "please." "Those rags are what is

Able to Sit Up and Take Food

WHEN Jo Mendi, performing chimpanzee of the Detroit Zoological park, fell dangerously ill not long ago, letters and flowers came from his friends all over the country who had been entertained by his tricks. But Jo is slowly recovering, and our photograph shows him in his new pajamas sitting up and taking a little broth administered by Director John Millen.

left of a kind of covering which covered the horns while they were growing, as I told you before," said he. "Very soon after my old horns dropped off, the new ones began to grow. They were not hard, not at all like they are now. They were soft and very tender, and the blood ran all through them just as it does through our bodies. They were covered with a sort of skin with hairs on it like thin fur. The ends were not sharp pointed as they are now, but were big and round like knobs. They were not like horns at all, and they made my head hot and very uncomfortable. That is why I hid away. They grew very fast, so fast that every day I could see, by looking at my reflection in the water, that they were a little longer. It seemed to me sometimes as if all my strength went into those new horns. And I had to be very careful not to hit them against anything. In the first place it would have hurt, and in the second place it might have spoiled the shape of my horns.

"When they had grown to the length you now see they began to shrink and grow hard. The knobs on the ends shrank until they became pointed. As soon as they stopped growing the blood stopped flowing up in them, and as they became hard they were no

"Wedding of Father Nile" Celebrated

ONE of the gaily decorated barges participating in the ancient and picturesque ceremony of Wafa el Nil (wedding of Father Nile), which marks the rising of the river to the point necessary for irrigating every part of the Nile valley. Thousands of years ago the priests of Egypt annually sacrificed a young maiden to the Nile during the ceremony as the canals were cut amid great rejoicing and the water allowed to flow from the Nile throughout the land. Now, because of modern irrigation, it is no longer necessary to cut the dams, nor is it desirable to sacrifice a young maiden, but the elaborate ceremonies are held just the same, with firework displays after sundown.

A Mountain Man Goes Home

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

"YES, I'm from the mountain country," he said with a lonely sigh. "And the prairie ain't not country for a mountain man to die. I've set my face to the mountains, my feet on the risin' road, And I'm goin' back up yonder to a mountain man's abode. I come from the mountain country, as many a man has come When the wandrin' fever's on him, and the call of street and slum, But now I am sick of cities, and sick of the city's ways, And I'm goin' back up yonder, in the hills to end my days.

"So thanks for your breakfast, farmer, and thanks for the bed I had; It was just a hayloft, farmer, but a hayloft ain't so bad. The smell of the hay was sweeter than any I've smelt before Since I waved my hand to Mother, and I turned from Father's door. I can't help you none with harvest, I can't help you none with stock, For my feet are soft with prairie, and I want the feel of rock, Oh, some of you call me hobo, but that doesn't mind to me, For I'm goin' back up yonder to the place I ought to be.

"Yes, youth is the time to wander, but age is the time to rest, And your home's the place to head for, and a mountain home is best. Not many, I guess, will know me, not many'll care to know, But your home's the place to head for, and it's there I mean to go. There's many a year left in me, but whether it's one or ten, It is there I want to finish, in the hills up there again. I'm off for the mountain country, and here is the reason why: For the prairie ain't no country for a mountain man to die."

MADE OF MOLASSES

MOST of us think of molasses as an old-fashioned sirup which was used in grandmother's day to sweeten the gingerbread, cookies and juicy pies, that gave an aroma to her pantry which we never forget.

However, molasses goes back much farther than grandmother's pantry, for our Puritan grandparents used molasses in all their cookery, and the full molasses keg was a large part of the food equipment. It was eaten with mush and cereals, on griddle cakes and all kinds of bread, sweetened dried apple pies, baked ham, cakes and puddings, as there was no sugar in those days, such as we commonly use now.

Molasses being the product of the South, has its delectable dishes which have been handed down to us from generation to generation. The following are a few worth keeping, as they are choice:

Louisiana Pudding.

Take one-half cupful of well washed rice, four cupfuls of milk, one-half cupful of raisins, one-half cupful of New Orleans molasses, one-half teaspoonful of each of cinnamon and salt. Mix well and bake two and one-half hours, stirring often during the first hour of baking. On the last stirring add two tablespoonfuls of butter.

Southern Waffles.

Sift one pint of flour with three tablespoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, then add one and one-fourth cupfuls of milk, two eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately, mix and beat well, then add two tablespoonfuls of melted butter. Add more milk if the batter seems too thick. Serve with New Orleans molasses.

Creole Sauce.

Cook one cupful of molasses and two tablespoonfuls of butter together for five minutes. Take from the fire and add the juice of two lemons. Serve as a sauce for cottage pudding.

MOST OF US KNOW THESE PETER PANS

Pestilential Nuisances That "Never Grow Up."

My cousin Arthur is a Peter Pan and he will never grow up.

I am sure that this is true, because ever since I was in Russian blouses and curls, my feminine relatives have said so convincingly on occasions.

I think the first time Cousin Arthur evoked this observation was at the age of twelve when Aunt Cynthia rushed out to the shed to find out what made her neighbor's daughter scream so loudly and so urgently. She learned that it was because Cousin Arthur was dropping fishing worms down her back. I held her while Cousin Arthur dropped. I got blisters and my air-gun taken away. Cousin Arthur got "tut-tut" and the information that he was a Peter Pan and would never grow up.

Then when we were in high school, Cousin Arthur thought of a wonderful scheme to pour tar in all the inkwells in the study hall. We did it after school and it was a success. I carried the tar and Cousin Arthur poured. They sent me away to military school. Cousin Arthur was reinstated quickly because the principal learned from Aunt Wilma that he was a Peter Pan and would never grow up.

At college Cousin Arthur and I sometimes bet on wrong things. I wrote checks on my father, and Cousin Arthur wrote them on anyone whose signature he could remember. Father put me to work in the factory until my pay checks made it right. The judge dismissed Cousin Arthur's case when my mother (Cousin Arthur's Aunt Stella) told the court that he was a Peter Pan and would never grow up.

I am married now and settled down. Last Christmas Aunt Cynthia and Aunt Wilma chipped in together and gave us an awfully nice whatnot. Cousin Arthur is crazy about a chorus girl in New York. Five or six times a year Cousin Arthur's aunts realize how lonely he must be in the city and send him a check for a thousand. Of course, I am very proud to be married and settled down and I often pity poor Cousin Arthur who is a Peter Pan and will never, never grow up.—K. B. in Kansas City Star.

John's Mother Praises Doctor

There isn't a mother living who won't agree that no half-sick child should be the subject for an experiment with medicines of uncertain merit. When your child is bilious, headachy, half-sick, feverish, restless, with coated tongue, bad breath, no appetite or energy, you know that nine times out of ten it's a sign his little stomach and bowels need purging. And when you know that for over fifty years leading physicians have endorsed one preparation for this condition, there doesn't seem to be any reason for "trying" things.

Rich, fruity California Fig Syrup clears the little stomach and bowels gently, harmlessly and in a hurry. It regulates the bowels, gives tone and strength to them and to the stomach; and helps to give your child new strength, energy and vitality. Thousands of Western mothers praise it. Mrs. Joseph W. Hill, 4306 Bedford Ave., Omaha, Nebraska, says: "I'll never forget the doctor who got me to give my baby boy, John, California Fig Syrup. Nothing else seemed to help his weak bowels. That was when he was just a baby. He suffered a good deal before I gave him Fig Syrup, but it stopped his trouble quick. I have used it with him for colds and little upset spells ever since. I consider him a Fig Syrup boy."

Insist on the genuine article. See that the carton bears the word "California." Over four million bottles used a year.

"HOT COFFEE, MISS" IS TOWN, NOT QUESTION!

When sorting out mail for some of the smaller towns, Uncle Sam's postal clerks can play a game of names or order a complete meal depending upon their ingenuity or state of boredom. One typical full course dinner consists of Possum Neck (Miss.), Two Egg (Fla.), Pancake (S. C.), Ham (Ga.), and Hot Coffee (Miss.).

Folks who live in the towns mentioned above don't think there's anything unusual in the names of their civic centers. In fact they attach quite a lot of sentiment to the historical association.

Hot Coffee, Miss., for example, is not a question but a thriving little town in Mississippi. During Civil War days, J. J. Davis who ran the local inn brewed such excellent coffee that the town was named after that beverage and a huge coffee pot painted on the side of the inn.

Hot Coffee folks are proud of the tradition and have no inferiority complex when dropping in at their neighborhood grocer to order the fragrant roasted and freshly ground coffee that has been the town's boast since Civil War days.

To accommodate them with 3 types of grinds, fine, medium and coarse, dependent upon the coffee making utensils they use, the corner grocer has installed an efficient electric coffee grinder to replace the old variety.

But outside of that, things go on the same. And Hot Coffee folks remain home folks who won't change the name of their town.

Old Ironsides Still Sails On

Restored to her former glory and her original condition, the historic U. S. S. Constitution is again afloat, proceeding from port to port so that Americans may see this bulwark of their country's first navy. Her keel laid in 1794, the scourge of the Barbary pirates and the conqueror of the Guerriere, she preceded the clipper ship era of the American merchant marine, and is one of the oldest vessels afloat. But modern efficiency demands some concessions, and the photograph above shows Old Ironsides' captain, Commander Louis J. Gulliver, U. S. N., talking over a telephone below decks, while at his back is one of the big guns of her famous armament, with a leather water bucket swinging above it. Right: The Constitution as she is today.

Why Do It Yourself?

A PERTINENT inquiry comes from Portland, Oregon, where they must know a great deal about canning, since salmon, apples, beans, peaches, cherries, plums, pears, berries, milk and several other products in lesser quantities are all canned in that state. This inquiry or rather this temperate discussion of a subject of interest to all housewives, comes from Jeanette Cramer, Home Economics Editor of the Portland Oregonian.

"About this time of year," she writes, "many a homemaker heaves a sigh and makes ready to can fruits and vegetables of all descriptions. Often I wonder if it is really wise. Is it true economy to buy jars, replace covers or rubbers yearly, buy cherries or peaches or peas, pay fuel bills for extra hours of cooking, and invest whole days of time and energy in canning?

Make Your Own Comparisons

"I don't question the wisdom of saving what the home garden or orchard produces. That is just good common sense. But I do wonder if many women don't go on canning every year from force of habit rather than because of any real saving made.

"So this year, before those canning days come, I suggest that stock be taken and comparisons made of the actual cost of home canning and that of a similar grade of commercial product. It may prove that the home canning is very much worth while, but on the other hand it may show that same supposed economy to be really expensive. Either way, it is a good thing to know before starting in."

The Red Cross also gave relief in 60 disasters during the year—several of major proportions, including floods in Mississippi and Louisiana where 50,000 persons were fed and a tornado in southeastern states where 368 persons were killed and aid was given 2,000 injured. More than $250,000 was expended by Red Cross in tornado relief.

7,000,000 school children were enrolled in Junior Red Cross.

72,000 persons were enrolled as Life Savers.

69,000 persons received First Aid certificates.

38,000 persons took Home Hygiene courses.

Indians Give Realistic Touch to Telephone Display at Fair

Two full-blooded Nez Perce Indians inspect a painting of Indian fire signals, displayed at a fair at Puyallup, Wash., to emphasize the ease and speed of modern telephone service as contrasted with an earlier means of communication. Black Eagle, seated, fled to Canada after the Nez Perce war in 1877, and camped there with Sitting Bull, who had vanquished General Custer's forces in 1876—the same year in which the telephone was invented.

World's Largest Organ
The organ in the convention hall at Atlantic City is now virtually complete and is by far the largest organ in the world in number and sizes of pipes, wind pressure used and horse power employed. This was necessary, due to the immense size of the auditorium, which is the largest building of its type in the world and has a total seating capacity of 41,000. The organ is being built from the general bond funds issued by the city of Atlantic City for the building of the auditorium proper and its equipment, and its cost is $368,000.

Favors Love-Making School
Love-making should be taught, not learned by experience, declared Prof. A. E. Heath, of Swansea, Wales, in an address at the social hygiene council summer school. "We should not dare to play the violin without knowing anything about it," he said, "and yet we do not seem to think it necessary to learn this important art of love-making. There would be more hope if appeals to the younger people are made on esthetic rather than moral grounds," he added.

Beware the Cough or Cold that Hangs On Persistent coughs and colds lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other forms of throat troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of persistent coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, bronchitis and other forms of respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold, no matter of how long standing, is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (Adv.)

STATE CAPITOL NEWS

Hiram L. Williamson, Secretary
Illinois State Association

A total of 1,213.37 miles of state and county roads had been completed in 1932, up to October 5, Frank T. Sheets, chief highway engineer, has announced. From the construction reports, it is learned that 847.07 miles of Illinois highways have been paved this year and 366.3 miles have been graveled or macadamized.

The Illinois aeronautics commission has made known a revision of its aeronautics instruction regulations, as a result of the public hearing conducted recently in Chicago. The regulations now provide that only federally licensed transport pilots registered in Illinois may instruct and that those who can and do qualify for instructor's rating may voluntarily secure such rating as additional evidence of their skill and ability.

A strict quarantine of all birds of the parrot family in Illinois, effective immediately, has been established by the state department of public health. Local health officers have been instructed by Dr. Andy Hall, state health director, to prohibit the movement of parrots, love birds, parakeets, Amazons, Mexican doubleheads, African grays, cockatoos, macaws, lorries and all other fowls of this class from premises where they now are.

By executive proclamation, Gov. Louis L. Emmerson designated Thursday, October 27 as Navy day and requested the people of Illinois to observe the occasion by ceremonies honoring the navy and the late Theodore Roosevelt, whose birthday anniversary falls on the same date.

Bids on 157.76 miles of paving, 43.19 miles of grading, 14 bridge projects, and a submarine cable were opened on October 23 by Frank T. Sheets, chief highway engineer. This series estimated to exceed $5,000,000 includes 49 projects in 27 counties. Added to the 23 sections for which bids were received on October 14, it will place an immense amount of work in line for early action, according to the highway engineers.

The state department of purchases and construction does not have the right or power to fix a minimum wage scale to be paid by contractors on work on the Illinois waterway, Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom has advised Director Henry Kohn. The question arose when the department asked contractors to submit their wage scale with bids received in September for the construction of a bridge over the waterway at Joliet.

The Library Extension division has recently published its biennial report for the two years ending December 31, 1931. The report surveys the work done by Illinois libraries during the period, giving comparative statistics for libraries in the same population class. Copies have been mailed to all libraries and boards of directors, and are available for distribution to anyone who is interested, on application to the superintendent, Library Extension division, Springfield.

A board of education is not liable for injuries or damages which might be incurred by the negligent operation of a bus used in transporting pupils to and from school, Attorney General Carlstrom has advised the state's attorney at Mount Carmel.

With a number of schools already suspended because of scarlet fever and the probability that others will close for the same reason, Dr. Andy Hall, state health director, declared in a recent statement that this method of dealing with an epidemic is both wasteful and ineffective. The temporary employment of medical and nursing service is far more effective and much cheaper than closing the schools as a means of combating scarlet fever, he states.

An experiment in billing electricity and gas on an estimated basis in instances when the customer is not at home when the meter-reader calls will be instituted in Lake and McHenry counties with the permission of the Illinois commerce commission. The company will send the customer an estimated bill based on the customer's average consumption. Adjustments will be made when a meter reading eventually is taken.

The Illinois coal report for September, issued by John G. Millhouse, director of the state department of mines and minerals, shows that the month's output of 76 shipping mines was 2,309,554 tons or 729,354 tons more than the August production. The average days' work at the mines in operation was 14.5 compared to 9.6 during the preceding month.

City of Spires

There are so many fine spires and towers in Copenhagen that the capital of the Danes has been called the "City of Spires." The tallest spire surmounts to City hall. The Eraser-kvike is also famous for this feature, which has a curious spiral design. Then there is the notable Round tower, originally intended as an observatory, which is ascended by a wide spiral road, up which a horse and carriage can be easily driven. Peter the Great is said to have driven up the tower in a four-horse carriage.

Gov. Louis L. Emmerson has signed the two senate bills for diversion of the counties' share of the state gasoline tax to unemployment relief. The bills were passed at the special session of the legislature. One authorizes county boards to use the one cent share of the tax that is allotted to the counties for relief until next July 1. The other makes possible the distribution of the tax money to counties every month instead of every six months, as at present. Provisions of the bills may be adopted by a two-thirds vote of the county board.

A recent decision of the Supreme court at Washington that the federal law of 1911 regulating congressional redistricting is dead, releases the state of Illinois from the only legal obstacle to redistricting as attempted by the last legislature. Congressional reapportionment was enacted by the Fifty-seventh Illinois general assembly, but before the apportionment became operative, Judge Edward D. Shurtleff ruled that it contravened the federal act of 1911.

The measure passed by the legislature authorizing political subdivisions to sell securities to the Reconstruction Finance corporation to finance self-liquidating projects has been signed by Gov. Louis L. Emmerson. The bill is intended to provide for job-producing public works on which preference would be given workers with dependents. The governor has also signed the bill which extends the life of the Illinois Emergency Relief commission to July 1, 1933, and makes the auditor, treasurer and finance director ex-officio members.

Illinois cannot have an income tax law, under its present constitution, the state Supreme court has held in declaring invalid the act of the first special session of the legislature this year. The court affirmed a ruling handed down in the Sangamon Circuit court by Judge Jesse Brown of Madison county, before whom the test case was argued. The Supreme court says that a tax on income is a tax on property and violates Section 1, Article 9, of the state constitution requiring property tax to be imposed uniformly. It was also held that the act violated the Fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The state housing legislation, now pending before the general assembly, is designed to open the way for housing corporations that could secure loans from the Reconstruction Finance corporation. The housing bodies would be under the supervision of a state housing board of seven members. The Ohio legislature has recently voted favorably on a bill similar both to the present New York state housing act and to the proposed housing bill before the Illinois general assembly. It is pointed out that employment would be aided and consumption of building materials greatly increased if the legislation becomes operative. The law would regulate the rentals and the per cent of profit to the corporation.

The probable yield per acre of Illinois bumper corn crop will be about forty bushels, according to the October 1 report of the Illinois and federal departments of agriculture. This will be the highest yield per acre since the 1925 record yield of 42 bushels. Due to advance development, most of the state corn crop was safe from frost by September 20, the agencies reported.

The cost of testing cattle to detect tuberculosis has declined almost one-third since 1929, Stuart E. Pierson, director of the state department of agriculture, has been informed by D. W. Robinson, superintendent of the division of animal industry. Co-operation on the part of the cattle owners has played an important part in effecting the saving which amounts to about one-fifth.

James Snook, night agent and telegraph operator at the Mobile and Ohio railroad station in Sparta, was slain after a robbery. His body was found outside the engine house of the Wilson coal mine near the station.

David M. Flynn, vice president of the Geneva State bank, died of heart disease at his Geneva home. He was sixty-four. Mr. Flynn was a resident of Geneva 45 years, serving as postmaster there under President Wilson. The widow and two sons survive.

Dan Carroll, thirty-five years old, alias Morris Canfield, was arrested by Policemen in Chicago as he was lifting two suitcases from the parked automobile of S. B. Barrett of Williams Bay, Wis. Bureau of identification records showed that he was wanted in Joliet on an indictment for the murder of George Sanders, fifty-five years old, of Minneapolis, who was killed on July 25 near Channahon, in Will county, in a robbery.

Europe's Oldest Tree

In the parish churchyard of Fortingal in Perthshire there is a giant yew which has the reputation of being the oldest tree in Europe. This tree has been estimated to be from 2,500 to 3,000 years old. In 1769, at which time the trunk was intact, it is recorded that it had a girth of 56 feet and a diameter of nearly 18 feet. Today only two fragments of the once enormous trunk remain, and these are about 14 feet apart. It is remarkable that the stems are still putting forth leaves and shoots.

Roger's Press Agent

By MARK HEALEY

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service

ROGER TRUE always had dreaded parties, but that night of the Shaw's dinner party everything seemed different. The charming Mrs. Shaw greeted him with a beaming smile and Mr. Shaw, whom he had met only once before, had greeted him like an old friend. After that Shaw and he had gone arm in arm into the drawing room while Mrs. Shaw had presented him to the other guests.

"I do want you to meet Mr. True," she would say "to one of the older women, 'Roger True, you know. It's a great treat to have him with us.' Or to another guest, 'Molly, dear, this is our friend Roger True. You and he must have a chat together.' And then Mr. Shaw again taking his arm led him into the study to two of the older men. "This is Roger True," he told them. "He's doing great things at the Durand plant—put over that new dehydrated process." And then Roger True forgot all about his sandy red hair, his spectacles and his large awkward hands, and felt as much at ease as he would have felt at the Durand plant.

Naturally Mrs. Shaw didn't present him to Stella Howe because it was Stella who had introduced him to the Shaws just ten days ago at the country club. Stella, talking to one of the younger men when Roger came in, had merely smiled and said "Hello, Roger," as Mr. Shaw led him to the library.

That half-hearted sort of greeting from Stella had been a little disconcerting and as Roger talked easily with the men in the library he had in mind that later he must have a talk with Stella. He had expected to sit beside her at dinner but fifteen minutes later he found himself seated as guest of honor at Mrs. Shaw's right, with a charming, golden-haired blond on the other side.

In the back of his mind Roger tried to figure out what had happened. Either Mrs. Shaw was one of those perfect hostesses whose object is to make shy and awkward guests feel at home, or else her guests were much more responsive than any he had met at parties at home.

Mr. Shaw insisted on driving Roger back to his hotel, an arrangement that made it impossible for him to go home with Stella, and Roger felt not only a sense of disappointment but something of self-reproach as well because he had had no time to talk to her.

"I'm sorry I didn't have a chance to talk to you," he told her when they chanced to meet in the hall. "Maybe I can see you tomorrow evening."

"Maybe," said Stella rather vaguely.

Roger sat thinking things over in his hotel room after the party trying to account for his amazing success as compared with the sense of complete failure that he usually experienced. The odd thing had been that of all the guests he had met, Stella and the Shaws were the only ones he had known before, and the Shaws he had met but once before. "They treated me as if I were somebody important. That's why I didn't feel shy."

The next day Roger was too absorbed with conferences and consultations at the plant to worry much about the situation, but that night when he went to call on Stella his embarrassment amounted almost to humiliation. And as he met her in the stately old-fashioned drawing room of her father's house he felt all the old-time awkwardness and self-consciousness returning.

"I'm afraid I made a fool of myself last night," Roger told her. "I'm sorry for your sake."

"Fool of yourself?" said Stella. "You were gorgeous. Mrs. Shaw has telephoned me twice to tell you how wonderful you are and two of the other people have called up to find out how much longer you'll be here in the East. They're planning to have more parties. Mr. Mason told Mrs. Mason you were the most brilliant young man he'd ever met. They want you for dinner Saturday."

"But how did they—" Roger began, and then stopped, as his eyes met Stella's. "What made them think I was somebody? I felt like the worst cheat in the world. As a matter of fact, I've nothing to offer."

"Don't you ever say that again, Roger True," Stella said. "You know what you've done for Durands. I know, because you've told me and because my brother told me when he wrote that you were coming on."

"If I have done a little something—how do they know?"

"Because I told them. I told the Shaws that you were one of the cleverest men I knew. I told them you were a comer, I told them that some day you'd be famous. I told them because I knew that if they didn't know it to start with they'd ignore you and that when people ignore you, you act like a goop. I knew that what you need is a press agent."

"But, Stella, you had no right—" Roger realized he had made a false start. All that seemed to matter then was that Stella thought he was somebody. Ever since he had met her he had been fighting against his feelings of inadequacy, fighting against the charm that she exerted over him—and here she was telling him that he was somebody, telling him he was the cleverest man she knew.

Roger left his chair and took her in his arms. "I can't figure it out, Stella," he told her. "I know I need you. But more than that I love you!"

Lesson for November 13

MAKING A LIVING

Deuteronomy 24:14, 15; Amos 5:6-15; Mark 6:34; Luke 12:13-21; Luke 19:1-28; 11 Thessalonians 3:8-13; 1 Timothy 6:6-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. Romans 12:1.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus' Idea of Being Rich.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Right Way to Make Money.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Right Ways of Earning Money.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian Spirit in Business.

I. Treatment of Hired Servants (Deut. 24:14, 15).

1. Oppression forbidden (v. 14). The man who hires out is usually poor. The employer should not take advantage of his condition.

2. Foreigners to have the same treatment as fellow countrymen (v. 14). Those who fear God will accord the same treatment to foreigners as to their own countrymen.

3. Servants to be promptly paid (v. 15). The laborer was to be paid at the end of the day. The credit system in these times is greatly to be deplored.

II. Ill-Gotten Wealth (Amos 5:11-13).

1. By oppression of the poor (v. 11). The rich built magnificent houses of the proceeds extorted from the poor. They took the bread out of the mouths of the poor by high rents and taxes—a picture of the conditions of our own day. The prophet assured them that God would interpose saying that they built houses and planted vineyards, but they would not be privileged to live in them nor to drink of the wine thereof.

2. By affliction of the just (v. 12). This they did by taking bribes. Many are today living in luxury from the proceeds derived from bribes.

3. By turning aside the poor in the gates (vv. 12, 13). Because the poor had no money to hire advocates, they were turned aside. It is difficult today for the poor to get justice in the courts.

III. Jesus, the Carpenter (Mark 6:3).

While Joseph lived, doubtless Jesus assisted him in the carpenter trade. He is therefore known as the carpenter.

IV. The Rich Fool (Luke 12:13-21). Many today are seeking gold and forgetting God. Those who are concerned with getting riches while neglecting God are displaying utter folly. Observe.

1. His increase in goods (v. 16). His riches were rightly obtained, for the ground brought forth plentifully. It is not sinful to be rich. The sin is sometimes in the use made of riches.

2. His perplexities (v. 17). His land was producing more than his barns would hold. He did not know what to do about it. Had he personally held right views of life and a sense of stewardship to God, he would have seen that his barns held enough for himself and a surplus for the poor.

3. His fatal choice (vv. 18, 19). He chose to enlarge his barns and to give up his life to ease and luxury.

4. The awful indictment (vv. 20, 21). God called him a fool. Riches furnish neither contentment in this life nor a guarantee of continuance of life. It is not only foolishness, but madness to forget God while heaping up riches.

V. Reward for Laborer (Luke 19:10-23).

When Christ ascended on high, he gave gifts to men (Eph. 4:7-12). At His return to the earth, He will summon his servants to give an account of their stewardship. He will give rewards for faithfulness (vv. 16-19) and will impose judgment and condemnation upon the faithless.

VI. The Man Who Will Not Work (Should Not Eat) (II Thess. 3:10).

Growing out of Paul's teaching concerning the coming of the Lord, a tendency to idleness developed at Thessalonica. Earnest attention to present duties is the Scriptural attitude toward the Second Coming of Christ. Those who will not work should not eat. This is the right principle governing all charitable work.

VII. Peril of Working for Money (I Tim. 6:6-11).

Those who are working for money fall into temptation and a snare, and are exposed to many foolish and hurtful lusts. The obligation is to flee these things and follow after righteousness.

No Comfort There

"When a sinner is dying, he finds no comfort in counting the hypocrites in the church."

True Happiness

Happy are they who have learned the art of abiding within the inviolable protection of the eternal God, the shield on which all arrows are bunted, all swords turned aside, all sparks of malice extinguished.

Fountain of Blessing

Change of circumstances should not affect a Christian's joy. He should be independent of life's sorrows and losses. Then he becomes also a fountain of blessing in the world.

SYNOPSIS

From his fur post, Sunset House, in the Canadian north, Jim Stuart, trader in charge, sights an overturned canoe in the lake. With his headman, Omar, he rescues the drifter, who proves to be Aureole LeBlond, daughter of his rival in the fur business. Made comfortable at the post, Aureole proves to be a charming companion.

CHAPTER I—Continued

Stuart scowled with impatience. "Are you never serious, Miss Aureole LeBlond? You may ignore the facts but he won't. You French are careful—of appearances. If I thought I could get you safely over there tonight we'd start now."

The blood drove into her olive skin. "It's you who seem careful of appearances. You—you are bored with your guest, Monsieur Stuart. Let us go, then!" She rose stiffly, her face flaming with outraged vanity.

But he ignored the challenge. "A boat wouldn't live out there now."

"Then I shall go by shore."

With hands on hips he smiled indulgently at the indignant girl who confronted him. "Do you realize how far it is through the bush? It's a good twenty miles, and it'll be dark in an hour. Have you ever traveled in the bush at night?"

Ignoring the question she contemplated Marthe's beaded moccasins as she curled and uncurled her toes in their capacious interiors. Then her black eyes lifted to the man who watched her, ill at ease, as her face lit in an amused smile. "Have you really been so bored, Mr. Stuart?"

He laughed in relief at her change of mood. "Is it likely that a man marooned up here in the bush would be bored with Miss Aureole LeBlond?"

"That's rather half-hearted, isn't it? Can't you do better?"

"Yes, I can do better," he teased, "but I don't think it's good for you."

"You think I'm vain?"

"I know you are."

She nodded as she moved about the room. "That's true. I am. Father's made a fool of me."

They turned at a knock on the outside door of the house.

"Come in!" called Stuart.

Omar's broad face thrust through the doorway of the living room.

"You spik wid me?" he asked of Stuart, with a sidelong glance at the girl.

Nodding, Stuart turned to the girl with, "You'll excuse me?" and left the room.

"What you do wid her?" demanded the half-breed, as the two walked to the rear of the building.

"What can we do, Omar? She's got to stay until the wind drops."

"You don't know Louis LeBlond," muttered Boisvert, ominously. "Ef she stay here dis night it mean trouble for you and me."

"All right, let it come, then!" angrily answered the trader. "A little more won't hurt us. We can't get her home tonight in that seventeen-foot peterboro, and we can't put her out in the bush, can we? She's got to stay here. If he wants to make trouble—let it come!"

Stuart left the half-breed and entered the house. "Miss LeBlond," he said, "there's no trail alongshore, and there's a swamp at the outlet where you'd be eaten alive by mosquitoes. To start with our small canoe means filling, in a mile or two!"

She studied him with sober face; then, thick brows knotted in a mock frown, she demanded: "You're not trying to deceive a defenseless woman, whom fate has thrown into your hands? Oh, sir, somewhere in your black heart there must linger a trace of pity, of honor. Spare my tender youth!"

With a muttered exclamation of irritation, he turned to the window and gazed out where the running seas grayed in the fading twilight.

"Well, anyway, whether you're a villain or not," she continued, "I don't intend to swamp in that lake in the dark and get wet again. Oh-h-h! It was cold! It makes me shiver to think of it. And besides," her eyes flashed with humor, "suppose my what-you-call-'ems, my gibo-dieg-wason, shrank? What should I do?"

"They knew you took a canoe?"

"Yes, but they may think I landed on an island and couldn't get back. By the way, do you happen to have such a thing as a cigarette? Mine were water soaked."

"Yes, such as they are. But you'll find them pretty poor." He went to his bedroom and returned with a package.

"Now," she said, when he had given her a light and filled his pipe, "tell me about yourself."

"There's not much to interest a lady from Winnipeg."

"Try me. You came here three years ago to start a post for the Hudson's Bay company. I know that much. Father was here first, for his North-West Trading company, and, naturally, didn't like it. I've heard so many terrible things about you, that I've been gasping to learn just how much of a liar Paul Paradis was."

"So—Paradis has been blackening my reputation, has he?"

"Blackening is mild to what he's told me about the factor at Sunset House. You came from God's lake, didn't you? Well, it seems you left a very dark and mysterious past up there, Mr. Stuart, according to Paul."

"Oh, very! I'm really a terrible man, Miss LeBlond. Hadn't we better have Sarah in here as chaperone?"

She laughed as she shook her head. "From what I've seen of Sarah, I'd wager she's on guard now, waiting to rescue you from the woman with the gibodieg-wasons. No, Paul Paradis didn't impress me. He made you too black. Father is quite different. He intends to beat you but he's sorry for you—sent here by your people on a forlorn hope."

Stuart's features hardened. Forlorn hope, was it? LeBlond was a bit previous.

"This Paradis—did he tell you anything of his own past?"

"Oh, trust Paul for that! Most romantic and mysterious—if one were to believe him. Why, what do you know about him?"

An enigmatic smile was Stuart's reply.

"You do know something, eh? Well, I'm sure father does, too; but the man exploring its by-ways, testing whatever of interest it had to give.

"Little as this country can offer to a young woman curious of life," he observed, "it managed to provide you with one first-class thrill this afternoon."

"Two!" she corrected, her eyes suddenly grave with sincerity. "I was both drowned today—and saved!"

"You mean you were saved from drowning?"

She leaned toward him. "No, I learned what it is to despair—and I learned what it means to have life given back to me." The eyes of the girl misted. In the intensity of her feeling her lower lip trembled.

"You did that—gave me back my life! I did not thank you—made light of it. But I do thank you now!"

His face flushed; his gray eyes shifted uneasily under the poignancy of her dark gaze.

"It was easy enough—nothing," he avoided. "We were lucky to see you—that's all."

She shook her head. "I saw how you had to fight to reach me." Then with a shrug she shed her gravity as one sheds a coat. "Now tell me about yourself, Mr. Jeem Stuart."

But Stuart did not dwell long on his early life in Hudson's Bay posts with the father who had died at God's lake. Avoiding the girl's live interest in his three years with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces, he talked of the coming of the Hudson's Bay company to the Lake of the Sand Beaches, and the building of Sunset House.

"It sounds rather like a forlorn hope, doesn't it? I heard that your father thought it a great joke—said I knew what I was doing when I named it. It wouldn't last any longer than the setting sun."

"I don't think father knows you—very well," she said with conviction.

Their talk was checked by a knock on the outside door.

"What is it, Omar?" demanded the trader, with some irritation, for his evening with the daughter of his rival was proving most agreeable.

"Come outside; I show you something."

Leaving his guest, Stuart went out into the wind with the half-breed.

"Look!" And Omar pointed through the murk up the lake shore.

On a point, far up the shore, like fireflies in the dusk, a light flashed—then another.

"They hunt for her," added the half-breed, significantly.

"Yes; we must let them know she's here," agreed Stuart. "Take a lantern and see if you can signal them."

Returning to his quarters, Stuart announced: "They've crossed the lake to search the north shore for you. We can see their lights."

"Poor dad! He must be frantic," she said soberly; then her lip curled in a faint smile. "It's early, yet. Too bad to spoil our nice talk, isn't it?"

"It is," he agreed, "but think of your poor father."

"Oh, I do. I love him, you know. He's all I've got."

"Well, it'll be some time before Omar attracts their attention. All my men are up the lake with the freight canoes and my small peterboro would fill tonight. Your father must have crossed in a big boat. There's nothing to do but wait for him."

"Then I can have another cigarette and we can talk until they come."

Was she strangely callous, he wondered, or totally without nerves, that she could calmly curl herself in a chair and smoke while her desperate father and his men hunted a rocky shore, white with surf, for her canoe and drowned body? Most women would have paced the clearing outside in a frenzy of excitement. In all likelihood this vivid creature, who for a few hours had shared the hospitality of Sunset House, would never again cross his path. In the autumn she would return to the world outside, and, in the meantime, in spite of LeBlond's gratitude, the rivalry between the trading posts and the open hos-is a wonder with the Indians. That excuses a lot."

"When did you leave Winnipeg?" Stuart changed the subject.

"In June. It took me three weeks to get here, but it was wonderful—that trip."

"You like it—the wilderness?"

"I love it. Of course I'd tire of it after a while."

"You go back in the autumn?"

Lifting her chin she slowly exhaled a cloud of smoke, her half-shut eyes on the spruce poles of the ceiling; tilted head baring the round throat in its loose flannel collar caught by its scarf of crimson silk.

"Yes," she answered, after a space, "my father seems bound to marry me off in Winnipeg, you know. And Paradis worries him, with his mooning around ever since I came. Imagine," she laughed, "that monkey, Paul Paradis!"

"He's quite beautiful," objected Stuart. "I met him at Medicine Stone lake, last November."

Without turning her tilted head, she flashed at him a sidelong look from under her long lashes. "He seems to hate you; what have you done to him?"

"Nothing, absolutely nothing," protested Stuart, "except to knock him down when he tried to hog the trail."

The girl straightened in her chair, her vivid face alight with interest. "What? You dared do that—to the great Paul Paradis?" she demanded.

"There was no trouble," drawled Stuart. "It was nothing. He stayed down. What did he tell you, Miss Aureole?"

"He told me you had had trouble on a trail—that he had been compelled to choke you."

"If you ask Black Jules Renault, your father's head voyageur, he might tell you that Paradis has a poor memory."

"Oh, when I saw you, today, I know it. Paradis choke—you!" Her dark eyes lingered significantly on the wide shoulders, the corded column of his neck, the evident power in the brown hand which held his pipe. "But why waste time on other people when we are so interesting, ourselves?"

Her frankness was exhilarating. Imagine Mary Christie, he thought, so far forgetting her sense of the proprieties! Mary Christie, with whom Stuart through the evening had been contrasting this raven-haired daughter of his rival. He could see Mary's blond eyebrows lift in scorn of the sheared hair and the white-cord jeans; of Aureole LeBlond's unembarrassed acceptance of the situation which made her his guest; of her complete candor.

"Lead on, Miss Aureole."

So she led on while he listened; amused, startled, now charmed, now puzzled by the direct thinking and amazing sophistication of this graduate of a convent school in Winnipeg. Her education completed, she was living life to the full—tasting its thrills, tility between the company servants would prevent Stuart's seeing her. "Let me see," she was saying, "I'm to be here six, seven weeks more. How am I to endure that Paradis all that time?"

They Turned at a Knock on the Outside Door of the House.

"You might get your father to send him to Fort Hope," he suggested.

"That's a good idea! I'll do it." Then her black brows drew together as she added suggestively: "But you know, Mr. Jeem Stuart, I'm going to be lonely for some one to talk to."

"So am I, Miss Aureole LeBlond."

"Well, the answer is obvious. We'll talk to each other."

He shook his head. "I can't come to your father's place. There'd be war. You'll have to swamp again in the lake," he suggested with a grin.

"What? Wait that long? The wind might not blow for days."

Omar's dark face, following a call outside, appeared at the door.

"Dey build fire wen dey see my lantern. I tink a boat follow de shore, now."

"Let's go and see," the girl suggested.

With the wash of the surf on the boulders of the shore and the drive of the wind through the neighboring forest in their ears, they stood on the beach, peering into the black night. Shortly, a light blinked through the murk.

"It's a lantern—in a canoe," explained Stuart. "They're coming for you."

He felt her hand on his arm—felt her wind-blown hair on his face as he bent to hear what she said. His blood stirred at her touch.

"When will they get here?" she called through her cupped hands.

"Soon, now."

"Let's go back and talk until they come!"

So the two returned to the house while the sullen Omar waited on the beach.

"You know that little island—I think it's the one farthest to the east—with all the rocks and boulders on the shore?" she asked.

"Yes."

"You remember that split rock which stands partly in the water? Well, if you were to look behind that rock, some day, you might find a note from a very much bored person—that is, if you cared to go there and look."

Stuart thrilled at the thought of what her words implied. She wanted to see him again—wanted to talk to him. Then the hopelessness of the situation—the sheer recklessness of attempting to meet the daughter of LeBlond secretly—forced itself upon him.

"You mean you would paddle there—some day—alone?" Stuart asked, wondering what manner of girl this was who so lightly put her trust in a stranger.

"Perhaps I should so far forget myself," she replied archly, "if I found an answer to my note."

"Try me!" he urged, reckless of the outcome in his desire to see again this girl so vividly alive, so baffling to his curiosity.

Her dark eyes flashed the challenge: "You will be bored, too?"

"How can I help being bored—after today?"

"You're improving." A red lip curled in satisfaction. "A little more training and you'll be—"

The yelping of dogs and the sound of voices outside, above the beat of wind, stopped her.

"Here they are! He's coming—dear old dad!"

Stuart stepped to the door to meet the man who had, the winter before, down on the railroad at Wabigoon, boasted openly that two years would see the end of Sunset House.

"Aureole, my girl? She is here?" The agitated LeBlond, delirious with joy at the news given him at the shore by Omar, pushed past the man who opened the door. "Aureole, my child! Ma chérie!"

"Dad! Mon pauvre pere! Good old dad!"

As the trader took his daughter in his arms, in a swift glance Jim Stuart's curious eyes measured the rival he had never seen. LeBlond was little taller than the girl, but the set of the iron-gray head on the square shoulders—the bold nose and chin of the dark profile suggested the force and daring which his reputation had given him. Closing the door behind him, Stuart remained outside with the two men who had followed LeBlond to the house. In the blackness the Hudson's Bay man could not see the faces of the blurred shapes beside him. Then the door opened and LeBlond called them inside.

Look Up Your Copy of "Alice in Wonderland"

So conscientious was Doctor Dodgson (Lewis Carroll) about his books giving full value in good workmanship for the money paid for them that, when the printings of the drawings in the first editions of "Alice in Wonderland" proved defective he sat down and wrote purchasers (getting the names from a list supplied by his publishers) his personal apologies. These letters further said that he had made arrangements for the exchange of perfect copies for these first defective issues.

Those who sent in the badly printed first editions got nice new copies in which the ink was properly spread over the Sir John Tenniel illustrations. But they made bad bargains.

It was for two of these "defectives," and the handwritten manuscript by Lewis Carroll, that Eldridge R. Johnson paid $150,000.

And those who threw away the author's letter of apology and regret were also out of luck.

Any such letter offered on the open market would bring enough to make a good stab at shooting the wolf from the door.—Detroit News.

Translation Called For

A little while ago we printed some lines showing the queer words one comes across while "fossicking round in the dictionary." Apropos, a lady in Florida sends us the following brief exercise in unusual English. Some of our readers may enjoy translating it into the vernacular:

"He absterged his glasses with an insouciant air amid the apopomptics of his fellows, and was enough of a scollist, now that he was manumitted, to enjoy it as he would the sapidity of a ripe peach."—Boston Transcript.

Barter That Satisfied All Concerned in Deal

Forty-five years ago I owned a lumber business in a little country town in Manitoba. We were all desperately poor; a $10 bill looked as large as a bed sheet.

One day a farmer asked me to sell him, on credit, $10 worth of lumber, explaining that he had sold some hogs to the butcher, who could not pay him. The butcher would go good for the lumber bill, he said. I explained to the farmer that I would as soon trust him as the butcher and told him to get the butcher, who confirmed the farmer's story.

I asked the butcher if he sold meat to the Grand Central hotel, where I was boarding. He said he did and that they were owing him money. I told him to go to the hotel and get me two $5 meal tickets on account of his meat bill, which he did, and I furnished the farmer with the lumber.

So the hotel paid for its meat, the butcher for the hogs, the farmer for the lumber, and I for my board without any money passing.—W. J. Palmer, in Wall Street Journal.

FIRST TELEPHONES USED IN WISCONSIN IN 1876

The first telephone to be put into practical use in the State of Wisconsin is said to have been installed at Appleton in 1876 by Alfred Galpin, who had become interested in the invention while on a visit to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia where Alexander Graham Bell demonstrated his discovery. That was before a commercial switchboard had been invented, however, so that the only value of the telephone in those very early days was as a single private connection between two separated places.

The first commercial switchboard in the world was placed in service in New Haven, Conn., on January 28, 1878, and the first telephone exchange in Wisconsin is credited to Neenah in November, 1878. Early in 1879, exchanges were established both in Milwaukee and in Appleton.
The first toll line in the state was constructed between Milwaukee and Racine. In 1882, the Wisconsin
Telephone Company came into existence. In Milwaukee one of the earliest subscribers for telephone service was the City Hall, and the office of the mayor was connected with the fire department and the police department.

Platteville, Wis., boasts of the fact that the first person to speak over a telephone line in that place was the President of the United States, General U. S. Grant.

certain adaptness for the handling of delicate situations and a dignity that is required in but few professions. These men measure up to this standard in every detail. People remark at the smoothness and satisfying quietness with which a funeral is conducted by this undertaking firm.
They seem to have the inherent ability for this work.

"Line and Drop", Telephone Men,
Are Popular Feature Over WAGM

"Line and Drop, the Musical Telephone Boys," who go on the air once a week over Station WAGM, are telephone men in real life. "Line" is Harry M. Murphy, combination man, and "Drop" is A. E. Hill, central office construction and maintenance man, for the Aroostook Telephone and Telegraph Company at Presque Isle, Me. Murphy has a pleasing tenor voice, and Hill plays both piano and accordion. These entertainers write some of their own music, and after dedicating one of their recent compositions to telephone operators everywhere, they received fan mail from as far away as Los Angeles. The significance of using "Line" as a name is obvious, while "Drop" is a technical term for the wires connecting a sub-scriber's premises with the nearest telephone line.
